

"Of the fifteen people I spoke to, most said yours was their favorite gig of the night. Which, to be honest, I really didn't expect. I thought you would have been the oddballs."

— crazy music curator from Den Haag

Sc'ööf are a Lucerne-based quartet made up of drums & laptop, electric guitar, and two saxophones with electronics. They create acoustic glitch music using extended techniques on their instruments, weaving atonal melodies into tight, complex rhythms, and mixing a wide range of musical ideas within a single piece. Their sound blends jazz, rock, metal, punk, and experimental music into something truly their own.

Their performances are technically impressive, built on strong individual musicianship and years of playing together. They're hypnotic, thanks to long-form, repetitive, highly rhythmic structures — and intense, thanks to the physical energy of their playing.
